My 60 year old wife has been an employee of a large Corporation for 25 years. Her new supervisor immediately was antagonistic and prone to "joking" insults. Once she admitted that my wife's age and work habits "are the problem" we realized that we needed advice. The situation was not at the level of legal action but we needed an educated prospective. I called Bob and he was amazing. His empathy and solid advice on how to handle the situation was invaluable. We have followed his advice and are waiting to see how the issue develops. We now know who to call if things go wrong.

Robert S. Bennett's response: *"After nearly 45 years of practice, I still believe attorneys have a pro bono obligation to provide legal advice to the public/anyone who calls. So never a charge for the initial call. It is also rare that I can not provide some helpful advice or provide the name of an attorney who has the knowledge to help you. Having worked in the Harris County District Attorney's Office, served as a federal trial attorney, appointed as an Assistant United States Attorney, been corporate counsel for the Coca Cola Bottler in Guatemala, you may benefit from my service and experience.
